NJ Gifted Education website has launched

We'd appreciate your help publicizing our website – NJPING (New Jersey Parents' Interactive Network for Gifted Education). Parents of gifted and talented children and educators are networking to support gifted education in New Jersey. We share common resources and list events of specific interest to the gifted community. Anyone interested in adding events, ideas, suggesting websites and networking can contact us, and we hope someone from your newspaper does as well. All feedback is welcome!

We work closely with all existing state and local gifted organizations that are in existence. We list already established parent groups and all activities that we find out about. The website address is:

<http://www.njping.org/>

By finding and speaking with others, we hope more positive change can occur. Individually, we can sometimes achieve change for our own children, but together, we can change the state of education for all gifted children. Our goal is to create a community of parents and educators who want to share ideas and create positive change. Our website will be a place to learn about what's going on in gifted education, concentrating on the local and state levels.

Our gifted children deserve to be an active and successful part of the future. Together, we can make that happen!

For more information, contact either Kenneth Lang at klang@njping.org or Isabelle Lanini at ilanini@njping.org

Media alert – NJPING has several January events that will be posted on our website after the holidays, but feel free to email either of us to find out about them. We are also planning an advocacy campaign working with Roberta Braverman and Elaine Mendelow from NJAGC (New Jersey Association for Gifted Children)
